5. Flexibility
Interested in English? Psychology? Political Science? Business? Sociology? The Women's and Gender Studies minor easily fits into these and a variety of other majors. And many of your required classes are WGS-minor eligible. You do not have to go out of your way to add this minor!

4. Faculty
The faculty involved in the WGS program are some of the best on campus! They are dedicated to their respective fields of study, to students, and to the WGS program. Think we're biased? There's only one way to find out!

3. Students
The students who minor in WGS are compassionate, intelligent, and socially concerned. They are leaders on campus and in the community. Become a WGS minor, and you will have no problem finding friends with similar interests.

2. Marketable
Want to stand out from the rest? Expertise in Women's and Gender Studies indicates to future employers and graduate school admissions staff that you are concerned with social justice and sensitive to diversity issues. And knowledge of WGS can be useful in a variety of occupations, including—but certainly not limited to—law, medicine, social work, teaching, counseling, government service, business and research.

1. Interesting
The topics discussed in WGS classes and in Women's Studies 101 are interesting and thought-provoking. You will be encouraged to explore new perspectives and to think critically about how culture and history have shaped ideas about gender, sexuality, power, and privilege. WGS is a vast, complex, ever-changing discipline that has something for everyone!

So...WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?
Become a Women's and Gender Studies Minor today!

For more information contact:
Dr. Jennifer Thomas
Director of Women’s and Gender Studies
Jennifer.Thomas@wilkes.edu